Maya

Becket

Congratulations to our graduates. Maya, Reuwai's eldest daughter, graduated with a Bachelor of Social Work from the University of Vermont and Minor in Behavior Change and Health Studies. She received an award for a senior who has demonstrated outstanding potential of making significant contribution to the social work profession. She is currently working in Burlington, VT at a residential inpatient mental health and substance use treatment center for mothers who are actively parenting children. Becket, Tannwen's eldest, graduated from the Pennington School. He will be attending Saint Joseph University this fall to study photography and business as well as continue his love of rowing with their Division 1 rowing team.

Reuwai's daughters Sasha (University of Rhode Island) and Tess (Dickinson University) finished their freshman years of college. Tannwen's twins Hadley and Clay are finishing 5th grade and looking forward to a summer of having fun on the farm.

We appreciate the continued support of our neighbors and community. While our farm experienced a devastating freeze this April which affected our tree fruit, with a near 100% crop loss, the outreach and support is heartening. We have added new plans, crops, and activities and remain committed to welcoming everyone to the special place that is Terhune Orchards. Thank you for your ongoing support.

Pick Your Own— New Crops this Season!

Picking your own is a fun and hands-on activity for all ages. Come enjoy time in our fields and see how crops grow. Pick-your-own is a family affair and cherished tradition for many visitors.

In late June, visit our two-acre berry patch to fill a bucket with ripe, sweet blueberries. Juicy blackberries are ripe for picking from thornless bushes in late July-early August. All summer we offer a variety of colorful Pick Your Own flowers from the garden.

This season Pick-Your-Own looks a little different. Our farm, like many in our region, experienced a devastating freeze in April while all our fruit trees were in bloom. This freeze killed the buds of our peaches, cherries, pear and apple trees.

We have NEW exciting Pick-Your-Own this season! Easy walking distance from the farm store so accessible to all, just next to our historic apple orchard. We have a wide variety of vegetable crops to Pick-Your-Own this season!

New & Fun Things are happening this season!

Field of Colorful Blooms

Here at Terhune Orchards we are well known for our colorful cut your own zinnia patch. These multi-color blooms are ready to pick middle of July and the patch continues to bloom until a heavy frost. Picking is by the cup, cut and fill. Add to your arrangement, vibrant sunflowers and snapdragons along with the native wildflower that fill out your bouquets adding color and depth.

While you can enjoy all of the flowers freshly cut, some make beautiful, dried arrangements, art pieces and decorations. New this season we have planted varieties especially suited for drying. We planted assorted colors of strawflowers, statice, Gomphrena, Verbena, and Salvia.

Whether fresh bunches of flowers or dried, Terhune's flower patch is a colorful haven to Pick Your Own this season. Already picked bunches available daily in the farm store and at the farmers markets.

NJ Bubble Parties a fun interactive show full of bubbles of all kinds, giant bubbles, bubble snow, bubble foam and more! Be amazed at the world of bubbles. Enjoy two shows each day.

Behind the Scenes

By Reuwai and Tannwen Mount

Growing up on the farm, daughters Tannwen and Reuwai would wake in the morning to look out our bedroom window and see our mom, Pam Mount, making flower bunches in the zinnia garden in front of the house. We now rotate which field hosts our zinnia garden but summer flowers continue to be personal touchstone as well as an annual delight on the farm.

We have flowers of all shapes and sizes. Many of the crops started as a flower. Apples to strawberries, acorn squash to zucchini, wine grapes and even tomatoes, all started as flowers. In early summer, the smallest flowers on the farm are in bloom in the vineyard with tiny white spikes poking out of preliminary clusters to later form into individual grapes.

Monarch on flower by Ilene Levine.

Some flowers are planted for the role they play in our farming ecosystem. We plant ageratum around our organic fields. We do not cut it for bouquets because it's planted to attract beneficial predatory insects and repel pests such as aphids and moths. We plant cover crop mixtures on fallow fields to hold and build up our soils. In the cover crop, we always add seed varieties such as sun hemp and sunflowers to attract natural pollinators, including bees, moths, butterflies and birds. We do not harvest these cover crops as they are adding to our farm ecosystem and eventually incorporated into the soils to add organic matter. Look for our blooming wildflower garden in the fall. This garden is a wildflower mix from with more than 20 types of seeds. A diverse population of flowers can support a diverse population of pollinators.

Our Pick Your Own flower garden centers around zinnias. Zinnias are vibrant and long lasting; they also send up new buds after a bloom is cut so one planting in May will continue to provide beautiful flowers until the frost.

This year we are adding special attention in the Pick Your Own flower garden to flowers that look beautiful both fresh and dried. We remember while growing up, our mom would put dried flowers hanging from the beams in the farm store. During the 1980s dried flowers were highly popular with a focus on country style living. Interesting trends always come around and dried flowers are experiencing a current revival with focus on sustainable and long-lasting decorations. We got so excited looking through colors and combinations of dried flowers that we are now planting about 20 types of flowers that can be picked and dried from our garden. We also have a large planting of Provence Lavender which is beautiful on its own or a mixed bouquet.

Lining the entrance of the farm are peony bushes. These were planted over 20 years ago for Tannwen's wedding (peonies being her favorites) and now are a welcome to everyone who visits. These lush blooms remind us that flowers are a connection to memories. We planted 200 more peonies last fall for a Pick Your Own peony patch — so you too can share in memory making here at the farm!
